A TURKISH ATROCITY

In Which Officer Moore was the Persecuted Christian.

Policeman John Moore seemed to be getting the raw edge of the celebration yesterday. Whenever anybody wanted to make trouble he placed himself in Johnnie's way and gave him a chance to mix it. As a result he has a sore side and a shoulder that is still more sore, but he got away with everything he went after.

His most exciting experience was with Joe Villa, a Turk. Mr. Moore was riding along Washington street on horseback about the time the races were on and trying to force pedestrians back on the walk where they belonged. As he rode by Villa was in the front rank and the officer asked him to stop back, whereupon he struck the officer's horse a lively blow. When the officer returned along the line the Turk was still intruding himself beyond the people around him, and when Mr. Moore approached he grabbed the bridle of the officer's horse and gave it a vigorous jerk. Mr. Moore dismounted and took hold of the man's arm, placing him under arrest. He jerked his arm away, whereupon the officer tapped him over the head with a billy. Then the Turk grabbed him and they clinched. The officer fell off a bridge over a ditch with the Turk on top. They both got to their feet again without breaking their hold, and the second bout was a victory for the Turk, who fell on top. Again the officer raised to his feet when the crowd pulled them apart and the Turk dodged out of sight. Mr. Moore soon after located him in the Turkish store on South Second street, but as he went in the front door the Turk went out the back door. Villa ran to the alley back of Mealey's gallery, then to Washington street, east to Third, south to the alley, east to the Lightburne plaza, and across it to Washington street, where he was caught and held.

by a countryman. When the officer came up he told the second Turk to release him and he would take him to jail, which he did without further argument. The Turk saying he was willing to give up the contest. At the jail he was finally released on a cash bond of $25, and the recorder will do the rest.

Mr. Moore participated in another incident of a similar nature. Early in the day he saw an American sold to live in Tempe in front of the Yellowstone. He told him he was too drunk to be impeding a crowded sidewalk and asked him to hide out somewhere. He did for a few minutes, but soon appeared again in front of the Palace. A second warning was given with the same result, for a short time after the stranger showed up in front of the Anheuser. This time the officer told him that he would have to take care of him if he couldn't take care of himself, whereupon he intimated that he could and threw up his dukes. After a little scuffle in which bystanders helped to hold the peace disturber, who was a man of nearly 200 pounds weight, the officers got his clippers on him, and the journey to the jail was laboriously but successfully accomplished.
